

A black hole is a region of spacetime where gravity is so strong that nothing, including light or other electromagnetic waves, has enough energy to escape it.
The theory of general relativity predicts that a sufficiently compact mass can deform spacetime to form a black hole.
The boundary of no escape is called the event horizon.